

7 Must-Visit Charleston Spots, According to Fashion Insiders

Todd Snyder, Chris Benz and Eric Wilson share their Southern favorites.

By Mikelle Street • 03/15/16 10:30am

After three straight months of fashion weeks—men’s, couture, and then women’s—one might think that it’s all over. But it’s not. Beginning Tuesday, Charleston, kicks off their 10th annual fashion week, which is arguably the third largest fashion week behind New York and Miami in the United States. Since it’s founding, the South Carolina-based event has found support in boldfaced fashion names like Fern Mallis, Derek Blasberg of Vanity Fair, Eric Wilson of InStyle, Anne Slowey of Elle as well as designers like Todd Snyder, Christian Siriano and Marcus Wainwright and David Neville of Rag & Bone.

This year, the event will play host to presentations from the likes of emerging designers from all across the East Coast as well as Tracy Reese, Creatures of the Wind and CFDA/Vogue Fashion Fund-nominated Cadet. As all of these major players in the industry converge on the city, we ask a few past CFW participants exactly where you should visit if you plan on making a trip down to the beautiful, seaside Holy City this year.

Husk Restaurant

Recommended by: Chris Benz of Bill Blass, Cameron Silver of Decades and H by Halston, Todd Snyder

For those wanting to taste the South while there, this old white mansion boasts an entire line-up, replete with a standalone space called The Bar at Husk, that makes it a must-visit.

Grand Bohemian Hotel

Recommended by: Cameron Silver of Decades and H by Halston

For lodging, this boutique hotel with its full-fledged art gallery, wine-tasting area and Eleve restaurant with European influenced menu is ideal.

